Lilium is an action role-playing game taking place in a very small, but dense open world. You wake up in a strange and familiar environment. Your memory and skills are gone. You start your adventure. Only some hints of your past exist. The game is very similar to the Trauma Team series. The main character is switched, new abilities are added, items are replaced and the skill trees are drastically different. Lilium is a continuation of the game The Trauma Team 2: Cure. You can play only the main storyline of Cure to save the world, but it's mostly a story. In Lilium you play as a new character and have to make new choices. On the way you'll meet friends, enemies and crazy people. The game is inspired by The Legend of Zelda and Maniac Mansion. One world map with several islands with different biomes. The game is inspired by the days of adventure games. The world is alive and reacts to the decisions you make. You can talk to NPCs, get advice from people near you, trade, fight and hunt. The world is small but rich with everything that is needed to survive. The game takes place around the year 2050. There's no final boss, the world just ends at the end of the main storyline. The ending is unique and just shows how our hero got to a certain state, after his adventure. There's a lot of things to discover in the game, from normal loot drops to secret areas, behind-the-scenes views, different endings. Gameplay: The game is similar to the Trauma Team series. The main difference is that your character is switched and new abilities are added. There are two types of abilities, passive and active. The passive abilities are as follows: 1. Attack: You get in range of enemies and make your ability active, which gives you an attack in form of a skill-shot. 2. Dodge: You run away from enemies (bonus: reduces recoil). 3. Cure: You heal yourself. All abilities can be increased by skills you can level. You can level passive abilities by opening chests, killing enemies, as loot or by buying them. Active abilities are: 1. Aim: You can set your aim by placing your crosshair in a certain area. You can also dodge and fire. 2. Gameplay: "Ballad Singer: A visual novel story told well! The game is a true masterpiece with a great atmosphere and a heart that burns with a love for this universe and its characters. This is a title where you can take your time to savor every scene without having to rush through it or miss anything. The story progresses along with the characters and the whole experience of the game is in a way like a roller-coaster. Gameplay is not the most original aspect of this game as it is based on the RPG concept and the events unfold as you do in a typical RPG. The player can change the storyline to improve the game's outcome. The events will always remain the same regardless of the change. The game's controls are simple. You simply move the cursor up or down the page to skip the text and move the cursor left or right to read more. There are no ads nor hidden messages in this game, but some rather weird sounds can be heard in a few places of the story. The Ballad Singer works great with both laptop and tablet as the interface is simple to use." Gameplay: "Ballad Singer: A visual novel story told well!  began operating on 31 May 2015. The new service is intended to give users "the opportunity to set up a place for human beings to hold human conversations and musical performances using the Internet as a tool to strengthen positive human connections". The name "Hivemind" refers to the idea that people naturally can be connected through the Internet by means of neural networks. Musicology As a musicology blog, Beekeeper System's articles are a mix of research and review. They focus on the nature and relationship between music and society. The blog's mission is "to promote and explore musical understanding and discourse in its broadest sense". Musicology: On the whole, Beekeeper System promotes a 'liberatory' or 'avant-garde' approach to music studies. It's a feature of the Posts on Musicology's Being category that within it, each item ('post') can belong to one or more specific schools or frameworks of thinking about music. Besides musical communications and artists (e.g. David Lynch and the song 'Goodbye, Sunflower') and composers, their keywords have included Béla Bartók, John Cage, Conrad (Paul) Denard and John McLaughlin. A blogpost by Beekeeper System in April 2014 explains: "In essence, I simply take a section of music and attempt to look at how and why it was (or could have been) written. An example I gave was the use of music by sources with strong Nazi leanings and how this might suggest that the SS needed a way to reduce the fear that bombing raids might inspire in their troops, through music that accepted defeat as a way of encouraging its soldiers to see life continuing under the Nazis." Beekeeper System recognises that terminology is of critical importance in musicology and that "there can be no universal solutions to these problems" but they believe "the use of technology might lead to much wider options in the future" A dedicated and informative Twitter account and Facebook page for Beekeeper System provide a valuable picture of the two blogger's activity. The blog makes further use of social media in a very selective yet informative way: Beekeeper System has gathered a loyal following of followers through use of Twitter's technology, Facebook, Instagram, Tumblr and YouTube. All these technologies are brought together by Facebook's platform. A list of best-known blogs in the musicology blog section of Classical Music Studies Blogs lists Beekeeper System at No. 14.
