What's new in this version 1.3: - New chart - New report (data export module). - Re-layout. - Bug fixes. Ask HN: Do you know of any remote companies that offer medical and dental insurance? - EGreg I'm in the process of getting back in the working world after a long break and also considering applying for remote work. I am very open to both medical and dental insurance plans, including dental benefits, however I'm having trouble finding a company that offers either. I'd prefer a company that's cheap and fast, something like Blue Shield would be fine. The best I've been able to find are companies that offer health insurance by rotating you through 3 or 4 different providers during the year and one that will only provide dental. Any suggestions or anyone who has had similar experience? ===== yole I have had good luck with [~~~ EGreg thanks, this looks really promising. I'll give that a shot next week ----- sidcool Please advise as to what the markets are in any country. ----- mscottmcbee I'm working with a remote company that's exactly this. We pay for $35/mo per employee for their individual insurance and dental and $38 for family insurance + dental. I usually look for companies that have top tier medical plans from a regional/national insurance provider - because if you get sick, you'll rarely be without insurance and this is something you can get fast. That way it won't be a huge pain to switch. ----- spudfogg [Role of nuclear import of NFATc in thrombin-induced gene expression in human platelets. The stimulation of human platelets by thrombin rapidly activates a biphasic transcriptional regulation of specific genes, comprising both a rapid (within 5 min) primary response and a delayed (after 20-30 min) secondary response. At the early time of primary response, the activation of transcription requires the presence of transcriptional coactivators. Here, we have investigated the role of NFATc in platelet gene expression induced by thrombin. Using the red
