HyperMotion technology has been extensively used in FIFA 19, including live video streamed matches from stadiums such as the Allianz Arena in Munich and Old Trafford in Manchester. In addition, over 1,000 hours of player data has been captured from real players for use in the game. "HyperMotion is an exciting way to make the next generation of football gaming even more realistic for players and fans alike,” said Sébastien Pellistrand. “By employing the latest motion capture techniques, we are able to create a game that maximises player creativity on and off the pitch, which will drive the ever-evolving football experience forward.” Pellistrand added: “The FIFA family is ever growing, with millions of players from the many countries that compete to represent their home nations and their football clubs in this year’s edition of the World Cup. FIFA 22’s latest developments, including HyperMotion, are a reflection of our ongoing commitment to provide the most authentic football gaming experience.”

Alongside the introduction of new gameplay features, FIFA 22 also introduces more Brazil-specific features, including new player models for Jose ‘Pele’, Ronaldo, Roberto Carlos and Rivaldo. The game features stunning visuals, as part of a major visual overhaul. Players will notice a major improvement in the pitch presentation, including enhanced stadium atmosphere, goal animations and pitch and lighting effects. The game also features the most comprehensive set of player models to date, including enhanced physical and visual detail that bring all 22 real-world players to life. Finally, FIFA 22 introduces a brand-new Club World Cup, the FIFA Club World Cup. Club World Cup will feature every world-class club from 50 of the world's top football leagues, and will be available as a standalone event, or as a season reward in the FUT Champions and FUT International Friendlies leagues. FIFA 22 will release worldwide on PlayStation 4, Xbox One, PC and Nintendo Switch on September 27. Let's welcome another edition of the FIFA World Cup! The 2018 World Cup is already off to an incredible start with some fantastic stadiums, amazing storylines and a friendly competition between nations. But the real star of the show has to be the football,
