= "myValue"; $scope.myVariableName = "myInterpolatedValue"; html
 {{myVariableName}} I have tried > 0"> > 10"> None of these work. A:
 You could use a function to get the value. Here is a plunkr {{loopVar +
 item.index}} {{getInterpolatedValue(item.index)}}
 {{getInterpolatedValue(item.index,10)}}
 {{getInterpolatedValue(item.index,10,25)}} Q: $\lim_{n \rightarrow \infty} \frac{n+1}{n} (\ln n+1)^{\frac{1}{n}}$ by Taylor expansion.
 $\lim_{n \rightarrow \infty} \frac{n+1}{n} (\ln n+1)^{\frac{1}{n}}$ I thought about using the Taylor expansion but didn't know where to start. \ln
 $(1+x) = x - x^2 + \frac{x^3}{2} + \dots$ A: We start with $(\ln n +$
 $1)^{\frac{1}{n}} = e^{\frac{1}{n} \ln e^{79caf774b}}$

 anything to explain how a trans-fat percentage stays the same in a fat when you make a transition from diet soda to regular soda and vice versa? And what about fake sugars in juice/diet soda? I would think that if you're eating more than necessary (so your trans fat and calorie needs exceed your intake) your body would adjust and eliminate excess.
 Unfortunately that seems to be the opposite of what we're seeing. So the more you drink diet, the more your body needs to produce and accumulate the fat from all your snacks. One other thing: Your body can utilize the calories from the foods you consume but the type of fats you have in your diet is different than the type you have in the foods you consume. So if you eat a bunch of trans-fatty foods, your body can use some of the trans fat but if you're eating too much other saturated fats, your body will store them as non-essential fats. Also, if you're eating a lot of processed foods and having too many junk calories, your body is going to want to store them as fat. So again, even if your trans fat intake is flat when you go to normal, your body will still produce them if it's been consuming too much junk. So, a body that is consuming normal amounts of trans-fat or getting rid of excess sugar will naturally "thin-out" the fat as long as it's been overeating junk. Unfortunately, the opposite seems to be true. So, for instance, if you're constantly consuming tons of sugar and trans-fat and you're trying to lose weight, it will seem like it's not working because you're burning so many calories when you exercise that you
